Tributes paid to a woman who touched many lives

Dee Fleming was called 'Mom' by about 150; she helped the poor but was not affluent herself

By JILL FOREMAN
Of The Daily Astorian

Although low-income herself, Donna "Dee" Maye Fleming, worked to improve life for others who were poor.

It takes a special person to look past life's obstacles and champion the good humans can do for each other. It takes heart, and those who knew 62-year-old Fleming, who died Dec. 2, say she had plenty of it.

Fleming moved to Astoria in 1977 from Oklahoma City, Okla. Her husband, who was in the Air Force, was often away. When they divorced, Fleming moved her family to Astoria following friends who moved here.

"She raised six kids on her own. She moved us all out here, she's a strong woman," said daughter Theresa Fleming of Stillwater, Okla. She speculates her mother had 150 surrogate kids in Clatsop County. "'Mom,' that's what all the kids know her by," said Fleming.

Fleming worked at Bumble Bee Seafoods and put herself through Clatsop Community College, earning a degree in general sciences with a major in accounting. Her children say she didn't use her degree. Dee Fleming had discovered her heart's calling in other work.

For seven years she worked for the state Department of Human Resources' Volunteer Program, organizing rides for low-income people and the elderly as an office manager and transportation coordinator. She arranged meals and doctor's appointments; put together winter coat drives and back-to-school clothes drives. Fleming helped run the Clatsop County Christmas Program, preparing food and gift drives and overseeing the lists of needy families.

Her children can remember getting those very same Christmas boxes growing up.

"From a physical standpoint, she probably volunteered 30 hours a week the eight weeks before and one week after," said Peter Fritsch, a case manager for Adult and Family Services who was the Volunteer Program manager in 1995 and worked with Fleming. "I was brand new. She shared all her information, she was a huge asset to the program."

Dee Fleming

Fleming usually was involved with nonprofit or government agencies where there is a lot of paperwork, a report for everything, Fritsch said. "She always reminded us of the human side of what we were doing, she brought it all back. Mindsets like that are invaluable."

Fleming left to work for Clatsop Community Action, but would always take time off to help with the Christmas Program, said Frida Fraunfelder, Community Action's executive director. "She knew the agency probably better than anyone. Odd phone calls that nobody knew how to answer, those would go to Dee," added Fraunfelder.

At the Hilltop Apartments where she once lived, Fleming was an outspoken representative for the rights of the tenants, Fraunfelder recalled. "She was a very likable person, certainly an advocate for poor people."

It was a cruel bit of irony when during Christmas 1997, Fleming was told she had cancer. Two days later, on Dec. 20, her daughter's home in Lewis and Clark was destroyed by fire. The family soldiered on.

The process of radiation and then chemotherapy began for Fleming, every 21 days for three days in Longview, Wash. The chemotherapy didn't work.

"Mom said she was sick and tired of being sick and tired," said Theresa Fleming. Dee Fleming stopped treatments in October.

"So, I told her we were bringing her home," said son Toby Fleming of Warrenton.

But he was overwhelmed with trying to give his mother the best possible care and balance his job and family.

Toby Fleming says the answer came when Lower Columbia Hospice contacted the family by phone to help. After he hung up the phone, "thirty minutes later two hospice people showed up," he remembers. "Two hours after that, they sent North Coast Home Care over with a hospital bed, portable tanks, oxygen. ...

"They comforted us, too."

The Flemings won't forget the comfort and care Lower Columbia Hospice gave their mother up to her death.

The Hospice volunteers asked the family about Dee Fleming's final wish. "Her wish was to see all her children before she died," Toby Fleming said.

This was quite a wish, because one son, Dennis Fleming, is in prison in Ontario.

"We found out the next day from hospice that (a visit) was all confirmed," said Toby Fleming. Dennis Fleming was escorted to his brother's house in Warrenton to say goodbye to their mother.

When Dee Fleming died, she had gotten her wish.

NO TRACE IS FOUND OF MISSING YOUTH

Police late this afternoon had found no trace of Edward Furney, 23, who has been missing from his home at 377 Taylor avenue since Tuesday evening.

The fact that Furney maintains a fish trap near the Youngs Bay railroad bridge gave birth to the theory today that he may have drowned while inspecting the trap.

Furney's absence was reported to the police last night by Steve Nixich, his step-father. A search was started immediately.

Fred Onkka, friend of Furney, stated that he saw the man Tuesday night and that he was wearing working clothes at the time, and from all appearances had no intention of leaving home.

The missing man is described as being about six feet in height and weighs about 160 pounds. Furney was an employe of the Union Fishermen's Co-Operative association can factory.

MURDERED AT SMITH'S POINT

Positive Evidence That Miss Gunion Was Crushed to Death With Large Stones.

A coroner's inquest was held yesterday to determine, if possible, the manner in which Esther Gunion met her death. Several witnesses testified, and some startling revelations were made. An expressman testified that he had seen Miss Gunion yesterday morning on the roadway near Smith's Point in company with a man. He identified the body as that of the woman he had seen on the bridge.

The expressman says when he met the couple they were both in an intoxicated condition. The man asked him if he would take the woman up town, as she was so drunk she could scarcely walk. This the expressman agreed to do, but as the man could not lift Miss Gunion into the wagon, the expressman drove off. He says he is positive the woman is the same person as the one seen on the bridge, but he says he thinks he would not be able to identify the man.

From the developments yesterday, it would appear that the woman was not murdered up the river, but in this city. Others beside the expressman are said to have seen her in Astoria yesterday as late as 9 or 10 o'clock. It is the belief that the party with whom she was seen murdered her. Indications at present make it probable that Miss Gunion was crushed with rocks, while lying in a drunken stoupor on the beach. John Yoppera, who found the body, says there were several large stones on the corpse, and that one weighed at least 100 pounds.

It is believed the murderer or murderers dropped the rocks upon the woman from the trestle, which accounts for the frightful gashes on the head. That she was not killed up the river is an established fact, and the assassin is supposed to be in Astoria. The inquest has been postponed until Monday, by which time it is thought the murderers will be apprehended.

But if the belief that the woman was murdered here proves true, matters will be greatly complicated. What has become of her brother Adolph and Samuel Mielandt? It is now said that, soon after the three persons left Clifton, they were joined by a man named John Lambert, who was seen to start down the river toward Astoria with the others.

The man never reached Astoria, and it has been proved that the woman was murdered here. What happened to the three men is a mystery which will take some excellent work to solve.

He returned home to Skagit Valley the following year and began his lifelong career in the commercial fishing industry.

JAMES G. HORNBAKER.

The remains of the late James G. Hornbaker, who recently died in Skagway, were yesterday evening forwarded to his old home in Iowa for burial. Mr. Hornbaker was one of Astoria's best known young men, and as confidential clerk of the Foard & Stokes Co. only a few months ago, was sent to their branch store at Skagway. A few days since he died in that northern city of spinal meningitis. The body was returned to Astoria on the steamer Alcazar which arrived here Wednesday. Mr. Hornbaker was 23 years old, and came here four years ago, having in the meantime made scores of friends.

At 6 o'clock last evening the store of Foard & Stokes Company was closed and the members of the firm, employes, and co-workers of the deceased, repaired to the undertaker's rooms from whence the body was conveyed to the steamer Telephone for shipment to its resting place—his old home in Bonepart, Ia. These few words recall one life's history—a history of joy, of push, of business enterprise, of success, of friendship, of fellowship, of sickness and of death. What a feeling there must have been when years ago he left his home as a youth willing to battle with life, and willing to risk it in the far west, where many have made success, fortune and fame. He started out bravely, willing to endure the hardships and disappointments which life brings. He arrived here; made his debut; success crowned his efforts; he began to see dawn and victory. He soon made friends—lasting friends, and this ability to make friends, together with his untiring efforts to faithfully serve his employers, and his undivided attention to business, largely contributed to his success, resulting in his appointment to the position of trust which he occupied so well. Such men are found in every business house—the man who is trusted to forward new enterprises and whom his employers feel will do the work as well as is done by themselves. These reasons, coupled with Mr. Hornbaker's courage and enterprising mind, caused him to be selected for his last field of labor—Alaska. What a chance, what an opportunity for success, and success he made it. But fate decreed that in the midst of his active work, in the very dawn of his life, he should be cut down by the scythe of Father Time. Cruel as this appears to human eyes, doubtless to an all-wise Providence his taking away was for the best. A young man of twenty-three years, of exemplary habits, without an enemy in the world, with bright prospects, has gone to the shores beyond the dark river. His friends who would comfort if they could the mother in a far-away state, only can wish peace to his soul.

Mickelson said the choir performance and the written tribute were included as a "vital expression" from the student body after the tragic loss.

The service will continue with a song presentation by Ginger and Lisa Bowman, students at Lewis and Clark Christian Academy of Astoria. The memorial message will then be given by Doug Marshall, pastor of the Warrenton Church of Christ.

After the message there will be a moment o silence in memory of the students, followed by a closing prayer from the Rev. Ed Bussert, pastor of First Baptist Church of Warrenton.

Afterward, the pastors will be available to provide counseling to any who desire it, Mickelson said.

He said gifts of flowers would be acceptable for the service, or remembrances may be made to assist the victims' families. Such gifts can be made to a memorial fund, in care of the high school, for which cards will be available at the service. A separate memorial fund was established this week at the Bank of Astoria's Marine Drive Branch by a local business.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely, goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Friends affectionately recall longtime Seaside resident

By BRAD BOLCHUNOS
Of The Daily Astorian

Carl Hertig rose from humble beginnings to become a successful businessman, well liked for his outgoing demeanor and well known for his community spirit.

Hertig, 70, died Wednesday morning at Good Shepherd Community Hospital in Hermiston. He had been hunting Tuesday and came to the hospital complaining of chest pain, said Kelly Sanders, the hospital's ancillary vice president.

Hertig owned Reed & Hertig Packing Co. in Warrenton, now managed by his son Kevin. Friends said he was among the initial investors and fund-raisers for the Seaside Civic & Convention Center, and active on an array of community groups over the years, including the board of the Seaside Chamber of Commerce and Seaside Kids, Inc.

"He was a great guy, tremendous," Wayne Poole said. Hertig enjoyed hunting ducks and pheasants with his father, fellow Seaside resident Bob Poole, every year in the Hermiston area. They were hunting together Tuesday.

"He was always very friendly, willing to do anything – he'd help anybody," said Newt Schneider, who played basketball and football with Hertig at Seaside High School in the mid-1940s.

His care for the community apparently took its roots in early childhood, and from his mother as an inspiring example. Longtime friend Don Church recalled how Hertig's mother used to help tourists when she worked as a policewoman at the Turnaround.

According to friends Hugh and Jane McKenna, Hertig's mother brought he and his siblings to Seaside from Switzerland. As a single mother, it was an undertaking that demanded courage.

She knew she wanted to move to the United States but did not know where, so she flipped a coin on a map and it landed on Seaside, Jane McKenna said. She wrote a letter to the city and was welcomed with a place to stay until the family could find a place of their own.

Hugh McKenna described the family at that time as "dirt poor." He recalled how he and Hertig played together as boys.

One day, he gave young Carl some toy soldiers he admired. Years later, as an adult and successful businessman, Hertig told McKenna how much the gift meant to him because the family could not afford toys.

"They had less than nothing," he said. "I think he could have bought half of Seaside since."

Schneider said with fellow motivators such as Warren Kan and Bob Poole, Hertig founded The Boosters, a group which actively garnered community support for the promotion of tourism. He recalled novel public events spearheaded by The Boosters in the mid-60s, including parachuting, square dancing and silver dollar hunting on the beach.

He lived with his wife at a home he had built on Tillamook Head, and raised two children. Schneider described the Hertigs as "a great family."

His generosity also extended from his business, as he host benefit dinners for school athletics and other fund-raisers.

News of his death Tuesday came as a surprise, Schneider said. "Everybody was shocked. He was so active and hardy."

Jane McKenna agreed. "I saw him the other day at the drug store. He seemed happy and stopped and chatted with me. Then I hear today that he passed away. It was upsetting.

"He was the type of person I think most everybody liked."

Lynn Smith said her grandfather had sold the meat packing plant to Hertig, and he was well known in the community for his involvement. "He was a very respected man, very well liked, very personable – and I think everybody I know would say the same thing about Carl," she said.

Mark Winstanley, another friend of the family, agreed. "He certainly will be missed."

Frances Louise Kuntz

Mother, 78

Frances Louise Kuntz, 78, of Long Beach, Wash., formerly of Astoria, died Thursday, Oct. 14, 1999, in Long Beach.

Mrs. Kuntz was born June 29, 1921, in Portland, to William and Mary Mathison Langley. She attended Kellogg Grade School and graduated from Commerce (now Cleveland) High School.

During her teen years she sang on the radio for The Oregon Journal Juniors and developed an interest in motorcycles. She delivered the first posted mail to Timberline Lodge via motorcycle in the late 1930s, family members say. During World War II, Mrs. Kuntz was a mail courier in the Portland shipyards and sold war bonds.

She and Joseph Kuntz were married Aug. 12, 1940, in Vancouver, Wash. They established their first home in Portland. Mr. Kuntz died in July. Mr. Kuntz's career was with the U.S. Coast Guard, and the couple lived in Vancouver, Seattle, Friday Harbor, Astoria, San Diego, Hilo, Hawaii, and Newport Beach, Calif., before he retired in 1964. They then settled in Long Beach. Mrs. Kuntz helped her parents operate Langley's Cottages in north Long Beach and worked for the Seaview Sewer District and Cox Cablevision before finally retiring to the quiet beach life.

Mrs. Kuntz was always active, family members say. While living in Astoria, she was a cook on the Tourister 3 Ferry between Astoria and Megler. In San Diego, she took college classes in electronics and worked in the field, which was then in its infancy. In Hilo she worked in the weather bureau. Family members say in the 1950s she drove her Buick to Mexico City. She enjoyed taking ocean cruises, trips to Nevada, playing cards, handiwork and especially flowers such as orchids. Remembering Charlie

My heart is in my throat. Charles Kindred passed away Dec. 21. He was only 40. I had last seen Charlie on Sunday, when he left me an article on Jesus.

I had known Charlie since he was 15, the last five months we had worked together, laughed together, and talked and debated many subjects. I tried to expound on the wisdom and faith as expressed in the Holy Bible, aided by turning on a New Testament tape, and by Christian radio KPDQ, sometimes to Charlie's chagrin. Charlie's faith in Christ, perhaps was more simple, as expressed in the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," and in "Love one another, as I have loved you." Charlie showed this virtue at work and in life, and in conversations with friends. He expressed this great commandment of Jesus by saying "I love you," to his own family. I have a difficult time with this commandment, as many men do, both in living it, and saying it.

Thinking back over our conversations, and remembering Charlie, I feel in my heart, I perceived in my mind, I discern in my spirit, and I know by the Word of God, that Charlie and I were both right, for you see, I loved Charlie.
